Welcome to Highpoint Heritage Trail, a 1/2 mile walking path rising 110 vertical feet on its way to the summit. This 80-acre park was established by the County Commission as a place for powerboating, paddling, fishing, and other water recreation. This scenic panorama. Robert Louis Stevenson wrote the words now carved in stone here as he travelled by train along the river in 1879: “And when I had asked the name of a river from the brakesman, and heard that it was called the Susquehanna, the beauty of the name seemed to part and parcel of the beauty of the land. As when Adam with divine fitness named the creatures, so this word Susquehanna was at once accepted by the fancy. That was the name, as no other could be, for that shining river and desirable valley.”

This landscape has hosted centuries of human history, with settlements of the region’s first inhabitants reaching back 12,000 years. As many as 50,000 Native Americans have lived their lives on the landscape visible from Highpoint. One of the earliest contacts between Europeans and indigenous peoples of the region occurred in 1608. Captain John Smith met the Susquehannock on the river during his exploration of the upper Chesapeake Bay. Of all Native American tribes, they were the last to occupy this area. Two of the last Susquehannock village sites, dating to the 1670s, are now preserved as part of the nearby Native Lands County Park and Upper Leibhart Archaeological Preserve.

To the north, the Wrightsville-Columbia river crossing was a strategic transportation route early in America’s history and the scene of key historical events: 1730—John Wright established a ferry across the river. 1775—Yorks militia crossed the river here on their way to join General Washington after the battle of Bunker Hill. 1777—After the British invasion of Philadelphia, the Second Continental Congress fled across the river to convene in York for nine months. 1778—Prisoners captured during the American victory at Saratoga crossed here bound for a Virginia prison camp and later returned to nearby Camp Security. 1789—Thomas Hartley, York’s first Congressman, crossed here on his way to the First Congress in New York and later proposed this site for the nation’s capital. 1791—Citizens embraced President Washington to the river on his way to Philadelphia. Washington crossed here several times, reportedly once getting stuck on river rocks while returning from the Whiskey Rebellion.

The Susquehanna & Tidewater Canal was completed in 1840. It ran from Wrightsville to Havre de Grace, MD along the river’s west shore. The second covered bridge connected the canals on each side with a two-tiered towpath. A low dam raised the water level for easier towing of canal boats across the river.

The Susquehanna River Gorge appears here in all of its majesty. The area that sits just above the Safe Harbor hydroelectric dam is called Lake Clarke. The islands are the Conejohela Flats Natural Area, a major stopover for migratory birds. Turkey Point rises above the Lancaster County shoreline, topped with the 262-foot high wind turbines of Lancaster County Solid Waste Management Authority. The turbines generate 25% of the annual electricity needs for the nearby Turkey Hill Dairy complex.

You’ve reached the summit! The circle of seating, carved from indigenous rock by a local stonemason, provides an ideal setting for enjoying this scenic panorama. Robert Louis Stevenson wrote the words now carved in stone here as he travelled by train along the river in 1879:

“The long ridge of pasture to the left is part of historic Luxmont Farms. S. Forry Laucks, a York industrialist, began purchasing local farms in 1918 and eventually acquired over 2500 acres, including Highpoint. Delano & Aldrich, a nationally known New York architectural firm, designed his French-style mansion. The farm’s innovative, art deco style dairy complex was designed by the same firm in 1933. The dairy featured a round “lounge” where visitors enjoyed ice cream and light meals while viewing the scenic river to the south.
